Chapter 1 by Kiana

Before him, the world lay in ruins. Houses burned, people screamed, and giant monsters roamed the earth. As the boy watched, he felt himself smile. Yes, this was absolutely perfect. Something was missing, however.

It was perfectly silent.

No screams, no sound, nothing. It was eerily quiet, unnaturally so. Not that anything about the scene was natural. He reached out his hand, when all of a sudden-

"Rio!"

A voice woke the teenager from his sleep. He shook his head, trying to adjust to the bright sunlight flowing in through the window. He'd been having that dream for a week now. He was a demon, yes, so it was to be expected, but he still didn't like it. Groaning, he stood up and looked outside. A large castle was visible in the distance, and people were getting ready for a festival. Even the steadfast knights were lazing around, flirting with the young maidens walking around. Yes, the Sun Festival was starting soon, and everyone was desperate to find someone to spend it with, even Rio. It didn't matter if it was male or female, he just wanted to someone to pass time with during the festival dedicated to the gods of love and friendship.

"Rio!" the sharp call brought the boy back to his senses. Throwing on some clothes, he left his room to see his adoptive mother standing before him. Short and stocky, she had a powerful aura about her. Five years ago, she found him, a boy without any memories of who or where he was.

"O-Oh, good morning Marta."

"Rio, I have some news for you." The look on Marta's face told him it wasn't good.
